the 5 elements theory

the five elements theory is an asian philosophy that outlines the interactions & relationship between things, the five elements – wood, fire, earth, metal, & water. they are believed to be the fundamental elements of everything in the universe.

wood feeds fire, fire makes earth, earth creates metal, metal holds water & water nourishes the wood, wood roots earth, earth dams water, water extinguishes fire, fire melts metal, & metal cuts wood. each element both controls & is controlled by another element.

fire

fire is the element of heat, summer, & enthusiasm. it symbolises nature at its peak of growth & warmth in human relationships. fire is represented by the colour red. fire's motion is upwards, associated with dynamic, energy, & passion.

Signature Cocktails

c u d e n

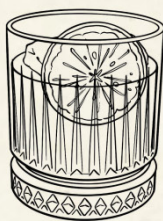

the popular beetroot soup “canh cu den” turns into a drink. the sweetness of the homemade beetroot syrup is combined with the spiciness of vermouth & a touch of whisky that create an intense finish. the crunchy seaweed will add the hints of sea.

earth

earth is the element of the time of harvest, abundance, nourishment, fertility, & the mother-child relationship. this element is regarded as central to balance, where energy decreases in movement & a change of seasons. it symbolises stability. earth is characterised by the colour yellow. it indicates patience, reliability & rationality & is considered as an energetic element.

Signature Cocktails

the maroon room picante

a fiery fusion of Patron tequila infused with cilantro and jalapenos, balanced by zesty lime and a touch of salt for a tantalizingly spicy and refreshing experience.

----------------	---	-----

wood

element of wood: wood is the most human of the fivefold conceptual scheme. it is the element of spring & symbolises the creative urge to achieve.

it is associated with the power to look forward, plan & make decisions, hence growth & development. wood energy is rising & expanding, & is the force of growth & vitality.
therefore, the colour representing wood is green.
